Be Prepared To Stay In Business

PLANNING MAKES GOOD BUSINESS SENSE

How quickly will your company get back to business after a disaster? Whether it is natural or manmade, the increasing occurrence of disasters demonstrates the importance of being prepared for any emergency. You can help your company survive by being prepared, putting emergency procedures in place, and continue to practice for all types of emergencies.

Many businesses, such as those that have less than one thousand employees, think that disaster readiness planning is something that is too complicated or too expensive to implement. Another common response is "It won't happen to me." These assumptions have been the downfall of many businesses that unnecessarily failed. Knowing what to do during an emergency is an important part of being prepared and may make all the difference when seconds count.

It is essential to include employees from all levels in the planning, implementation, and to be active members of your internal emergency management team.

DISASTER READINESS PROVIDES SURVIVAL SKILLS ESSENTIAL TO THE WELL BEING OF YOUR COMPANY AND EMPLOYEES

Knowledge Is Power

You may need to survive on your own after an emergency. This means having your own food, water, and other supplies in sufficient quantity to last for at least ten days.

First responders and disaster relief workers will be working on the scene after a disaster, but they cannot reach everyone immediately. You could get help in hours. or it might take days. In addition, basic services such as electricity, gas, water, sewage treatment, and telephones may be cut off for days, a week, or even longer. Don't become a statistic. Get started today!
